'CRITICAL PLURALISM'

False Memories and Real Epistemic Problems

Featured speaker: Steven D. Brown (University of Leicester)

Respondent: Tomohide Atsumi (Osaka University, Kyōsei Studies)

The term 'false memory' has a complex history. Initially coined as political term by social actors aiming to deconstruct the idea of 'recovered memories', it eventually became the object of a laboratory based field of academic 'false memory studies'. To speak of 'false memories' is to be drawn into an 'ecology of practices' and multiple sets of lateral comparisons, which resist any ready synthesis or overview. In this talk I will navigate this field by exploring how procedures of verification and falsification in relation to memory become translated between different settings and practices, in particular those of the laboratory, the courtroom and the clinic.
